DRAINAGE DITCH IS HELD NOT SAME AS WATERS OF STREAM

That the waters of a drainage ditch, though non-navigable, anyhow not more navigable than many of the streams which have been beneficiaries under rivers and harbors appropriation bills, cannot be appropriated as the unappropriated waters of ordinary non-navigable streams may be, is the decision of the United States court for Arizona in the case of the government against Watson and Spicer.

This action against the defendants was instituted largely for the benefit of Lincoln Fowler who is irrigating large tracts of land, his own and other, leased from the government on the Indian reservation south of the city from drainage canal constructed to relieve the lands south of Tempe.

The defendants, Watson and Spicer, made an appropriation of these waters in the same manner as they would have appropriated the waters of any flowing, non-navigable stream. The drainage canal was constructed under the provisions of the state law for the organization of drainage districts. The people of the drainage district entered into an agreement with the government for the disposition of the water on the Indian reservation and it was in that way that the case went into the United States court.

The case came up last June at Tucson on a hearing of an application for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendants from taking water from the canal. They had already established an elaborate pumping system and were absorbing about all the water that developed above them. A temporary order was granted and in August the hearing on an application to make the injunction permanent took place at Prescott. Judge Sawtelle rendered a decision on Wednesday granting the application.

The defendants at both hearings were represented by attorneys from Los Angeles who relied upon the laws of Colorado and California with respect to drainage districts. The Arizona law, however, gives to the districts the control of the water and in this case, the district had passed the control of it to the government.

RECORD POTATO YIELD

What is claimed to be the world's production of marketable potatoes on one acre, 49,531 pounds, or $25 bushels, has been made on an acre tract of land near Kanab, in the southeastern section of Utah, just a few miles from the Arizona state line. The record yield was made in response to a competition fathered by the Mormon church, and the church authorities drew a check for $1,000, payable to a representative of Kanab Ward of the Kanab stake of the church, which is responsible for the production. The church also paid prizes of $500 and $250 for the second and third largest yields, respectively. Prizes of several thousand dollars were paid last year by the church for record yields of wheat and other foodstuffs. The potato yield for which the $1,000 was paid was certified to by more than 50 farmers.—Reclamation Record.

LIBERTY LOAN WORK IS BEING LINED UP

While Joseph R. Loftus, Maricopa county chairman for the fourth Liberty loan, is attending to some business matters in California, his plans for the campaign in this county are going right along. There is a lot of work to be done. He cannot do it all alone, so first thing he wishes all of his friends and the good workers of the last campaign to be ready to again get into the harness, once more for the good cause.

Mr. Loftus will return from Los Angeles on Tuesday morning and will begin at once on his plans for the campaign. He will have an office at the headquarters of the state committee, 202 West Adams street, and probably will establish other office locations as the campaign progresses. He will appoint a publicity director for the county and as soon as this appointment is completed, all of the counties in the state will be equipped.

There will be chairmen for each district and the districts will be outlined by the county chairman. Cities will have chairmen and district chairmen all working under the direction of the county chairman. Every citizen a bond is to be the slogan of the committee for Maricopa county of which Mr. Loftus is the directing head.
